NAZIS DESTROYING WAR PLANTS IN SILESIA

East Prussian Railway System Imperilled

LONDON, January 22, A.A.P. — Russian armies on the move along a front stretching from the lakes of East Prussia to the industrial regions of Silesia are threatening the vital railways of the Reich. Moving swiftly, Russian tank and motorised infantry formations are closing in on key points in the German railway system in the south and south-west of Berlin, almost the whole of the East Prussian railway network is reported to be in danger of being captured by a pincer movement directed against Königsberg, the capital, or which the Russians are 33 miles distant. In the centre and south, two of the main trunk railways east of Berlin — between Königsberg and Bromberg — were mowed down by Marshal Zhukov's drive for Poznan and by Marshal Koniev's thrust for Breslau.
