CORRESPONDENTS REPORT FROM INVASION FRONT

GRAPHIC STORY OF PARATROOPS

Reporter Jumped With Typewriter

From Our Staff Correspondent,

LONDON, June 6—Leonard Moley, representing the Combined Press, parachuted into France with a typewriter strapped to his chest, under his equipment.

"I got a bad looking when I rolled over on it after a hard landing," he says.

Moley flew with the bombers which followed up the gliders and planes filled with paratroopers whose job it was to take vital bridges before they could be blown up.

GENERAL DECIDED TO BE A FOOL.

It was one of the most daring trips of the war up to date, giving a clear indication of the determination of the Allies to push their offensive as far as possible.

"A fool," says Moley, "I agree that the whole thing was a fool's errand. But it was necessary to have an observer present to see what happened and to report the situation as it developed."

Capture of First Beaches

From Our Staff Correspondent

LONDON, June 6—Here is the story of the landings on one sector of the Normandy coast, as far as it can be told.

It is collated from hundreds of thousands of words that have poured into London from scenes of correspondents.

The landing began on the right flank of the American beachhead, where the 1st Infantry Division, under General McAuliffe, was first to seize the beach.
