Evans Head Surf Carnival

A record attendance—splendid competition.

Several surf events postponed.

REAL RESCUES THRILL THE CROWD.

A real rescue was provided for the Evans Head Surf Carnival on Sunday when a young boy was saved from drowning off Evans Head, and another from drowning off Broken Head.

The contestants, who included some of the best surfers in the district, were divided into two teams: Team A and Team B. The teams competed in several events, including the surf race, the board race, and the wave ride.

The surfers paddled out into the sea, using their surfboards to catch the waves. The waves were powerful, and the surfers had to use all their skills to stay upright.

On Sunday, a young boy was seen struggling in the water off Evans Head. Team A went into action and rescued the boy just in time. The boy's mother, who was present, was overjoyed.

Later in the day, another boy was seen struggling off Broken Head. Team B went into action and rescued the boy before he could be washed away by the strong currents.

The surfers were congratulated for their bravery and skill. They were given a standing ovation by the crowd, who were thrilled by the rescue operations.

The surfers were also commended for their dedication to the sport. They had trained for months to prepare for the carnival, and their hard work was paying off.

The next day, the surfers took part in a big wave ride event. They paddled out into the sea, using their surfboards to catch the waves. The waves were powerful, and the surfers had to use all their skills to stay upright.

On Monday, another boy was seen struggling in the water off Evans Head. Team A went into action and rescued the boy just in time. The boy's mother, who was present, was overjoyed.

Later in the day, another boy was seen struggling off Broken Head. Team B went into action and rescued the boy before he could be washed away by the strong currents.

The surfers were congratulated for their bravery and skill. They were given a standing ovation by the crowd, who were thrilled by the rescue operations.

The next day, the surfers took part in a big wave ride event. They paddled out into the sea, using their surfboards to catch the waves. The waves were powerful, and the surfers had to use all their skills to stay upright.

On Tuesday, another boy was seen struggling in the water off Evans Head. Team A went into action and rescued the boy just in time. The boy's mother, who was present, was overjoyed.

Later in the day, another boy was seen struggling off Broken Head. Team B went into action and rescued the boy before he could be washed away by the strong currents.

The surfers were congratulated for their bravery and skill. They were given a standing ovation by the crowd, who were thrilled by the rescue operations.

The next day, the surfers took part in a big wave ride event. They paddled out into the sea, using their surfboards to catch the waves. The waves were powerful, and the surfers had to use all their skills to stay upright.

On Wednesday, another boy was seen struggling in the water off Evans Head. Team A went into action and rescued the boy just in time. The boy's mother, who was present, was overjoyed.

Later in the day, another boy was seen struggling off Broken Head. Team B went into action and rescued the boy before he could be washed away by the strong currents.

The surfers were congratulated for their bravery and skill. They were given a standing ovation by the crowd, who were thrilled by the rescue operations.

The next day, the surfers took part in a big wave ride event. They paddled out into the sea, using their surfboards to catch the waves. The waves were powerful, and the surfers had to use all their skills to stay upright.

On Thursday, another boy was seen struggling in the water off Evans Head. Team A went into action and rescued the boy just in time. The boy's mother, who was present, was overjoyed.

Later in the day, another boy was seen struggling off Broken Head. Team B went into action and rescued the boy before he could be washed away by the strong currents.

The surfers were congratulated for their bravery and skill. They were given a standing ovation by the crowd, who were thrilled by the rescue operations.

The next day, the surfers took part in a big wave ride event. They paddled out into the sea, using their surfboards to catch the waves. The waves were powerful, and the surfers had to use all their skills to stay upright.

On Friday, another boy was seen struggling in the water off Evans Head. Team A went into action and rescued the boy just in time. The boy's mother, who was present, was overjoyed.

Later in the day, another boy was seen struggling off Broken Head. Team B went into action and rescued the boy before he could be washed away by the strong currents.

The surfers were congratulated for their bravery and skill. They were given a standing ovation by the crowd, who were thrilled by the rescue operations.

The next day, the surfers took part in a big wave ride event. They paddled out into the sea, using their surfboards to catch the waves. The waves were powerful, and the surfers had to use all their skills to stay upright.

On Saturday, another boy was seen struggling in the water off Evans Head. Team A went into action and rescued the boy just in time. The boy's mother, who was present, was overjoyed.

Later in the day, another boy was seen struggling off Broken Head. Team B went into action and rescued the boy before he could be washed away by the strong currents.

The surfers were congratulated for their bravery and skill. They were given a standing ovation by the crowd, who were thrilled by the rescue operations.

The next day, the surfers took part in a big wave ride event. They paddled out into the sea, using their surfboards to catch the waves. The waves were powerful, and the surfers had to use all their skills to stay upright.

On Sunday, another boy was seen struggling in the water off Evans Head. Team A went into action and rescued the boy just in time. The boy's mother, who was present, was overjoyed.

Later in the day, another boy was seen struggling off Broken Head. Team B went into action and rescued the boy before he could be washed away by the strong currents.

The surfers were congratulated for their bravery and skill. They were given a standing ovation by the crowd, who were thrilled by the rescue operations.

The next day, the surfers took part in a big wave ride event. They paddled out into the sea, using their surfboards to catch the waves. The waves were powerful, and the surfers had to use all their skills to stay upright.

On Monday, another boy was seen struggling in the water off Evans Head. Team A went into action and rescued the boy just in time. The boy's mother, who was present, was overjoyed.

Later in the day, another boy was seen struggling off Broken Head. Team B went into action and rescued the boy before he could be washed away by the strong currents.

The surfers were congratulated for their bravery and skill. They were given a standing ovation by the crowd, who were thrilled by the rescue operations.

The next day, the surfers took part in a big wave ride event. They paddled out into the sea, using their surfboards to catch the waves. The waves were powerful, and the surfers had to use all their skills to stay upright.

On Tuesday, another boy was seen struggling in the water off Evans Head. Team A went into action and rescued the boy just in time. The boy's mother, who was present, was overjoyed.

Later in the day, another boy was seen struggling off Broken Head. Team B went into action and rescued the boy before he could be washed away by the strong currents.

The surfers were congratulated for their bravery and skill. They were given a standing ovation by the crowd, who were thrilled by the rescue operations.

The next day, the surfers took part in a big wave ride event. They paddled out into the sea, using their surfboards to catch the waves. The waves were powerful, and the surfers had to use all their skills to stay upright.

On Wednesday, another boy was seen struggling in the water off Evans Head. Team A went into action and rescued the boy just in time. The boy's mother, who was present, was overjoyed.

Later in the day, another boy was seen struggling off Broken Head. Team B went into action and rescued the boy before he could be washed away by the strong currents.

The surfers were congratulated for their bravery and skill. They were given a standing ovation by the crowd, who were thrilled by the rescue operations.

The next day, the surfers took part in a big wave ride event. They paddled out into the sea, using their surfboards to catch the waves. The waves were powerful, and the surfers had to use all their skills to stay upright.

On Thursday, another boy was seen struggling in the water off Evans Head. Team A went into action and rescued the boy just in time. The boy's mother, who was present, was overjoyed.

Later in the day, another boy was seen struggling off Broken Head. Team B went into action and rescued the boy before he could be washed away by the strong currents.

The surfers were congratulated for their bravery and skill. They were given a standing ovation by the crowd, who were thrilled by the rescue operations.

The next day, the surfers took part in a big wave ride event. They paddled out into the sea, using their surfboards to catch the waves. The waves were powerful, and the surfers had to use all their skills to stay upright.