NO SHORT CUT TO 40 HOURS

It is likely that valuable contributions to trade union work will emerge from such an inquiry. The union movement, in developing national unions, is faced with the problem of reconciling the interests of the individual union with the broader interests of the national union. This is a problem which has been recognized by the Australian Labor Party, which has adopted a policy of national unionism. The ACTU, however, has not yet recognized the need for such an inquiry. It is hoped that the ACTU will consider this matter seriously and take the necessary steps to ensure that its policies are in line with the national interests of the trade union movement.

The ACTU has been criticized for its lack of coherence and coordination, and for its inability to speak with one voice on important issues. The ACTU has also been criticized for its failure to develop a clear and consistent policy on international trade union issues. The new ACTU should be able to address these criticisms by developing a clear and consistent policy on national unionism, and by working closely with the national government to ensure that its policies are in line with the national interests of the trade union movement.

Steps to Restore Monarchy In Spain

From Our Own Correspondent at London

The negotiations between the Monarchist and Republican leaders in Spain have been going on for the last two months, and London has been informed that a final solution to the constitutional questions of the day will be announced shortly. It is understood that the Monarchists are prepared to accept the constitution as it is, as long as the Republican leaders are prepared to accept the king as the constitutional head of state. The Monarchists are also prepared to accept the election of a constituent assembly to frame a new constitution.

The Republican leaders, however, are not prepared to accept the king as the constitutional head of state. They are prepared to accept the election of a constituent assembly to frame a new constitution, but they are not prepared to accept the king as the constitutional head of state. The Monarchists are also prepared to accept the election of a constituent assembly to frame a new constitution, but they are not prepared to accept the king as the constitutional head of state.

The new constitution is expected to be announced shortly, and it is hoped that a new government will be formed as soon as possible. The Monarchists are expected to form the new government, and they are expected to have the support of the majority of the people in Spain. The Republican leaders are expected to accept the new constitution, and they are expected to have the support of the minority of the people in Spain.

AXIS AGENTS STILL PLAN CONQUESTS

From Our Own Correspondent in Argentina

A number of foreign publications have reported that the Axis powers are still planning conquests. However, the Axis powers have not yet announced any such plans. It is possible that the Axis powers are still planning conquests, but it is also possible that they are not planning conquests. It is difficult to say for certain what the Axis powers are planning, but it is certain that they are not planning conquests.

The Axis powers are not planning conquests, but they are planning to continue their war with the Allies. They are determined to continue their war with the Allies, and they are not planning to make any peace with the Allies. It is certain that they are not planning to make any peace with the Allies, but it is difficult to say for certain what the Axis powers are planning.

"Atomic Defence Will Involve More Air Power"

"Atomic defence will involve more air power," said Mr. John H. Wilson, who is the Minister for Air, in a recent speech. He said that the air force must be the first line of defence, and that it must be armed with the most modern weapons. He said that the air force must be able to strike at the heart of the enemy, and that it must be able to defend the country against air attack. He said that the air force must be able to defend the country against air attack, and that it must be able to strike at the heart of the enemy.

Mr. Wilson said that the air force must be able to defend the country against air attack, and that it must be able to strike at the heart of the enemy. He said that the air force must be able to defend the country against air attack, and that it must be able to strike at the heart of the enemy. He said that the air force must be able to defend the country against air attack, and that it must be able to strike at the heart of the enemy.