The Great North Road: An Historic Highway.

by Frank Walker

WHY NORTH, NEAR DONELLY STATION.

This page contains a printed text that describes the historical significance of the Great North Road, a major route in Australia during the 19th century. The text discusses the road's importance, its construction, and the various towns and landmarks along its route. It also mentions the challenges faced by travelers and the economic and social impacts of the road.

The document begins with a description of the road's significance, stating that it was a vital link for trade, communication, and transportation in the early days of colonial Australia. It notes that the road was the first major highway to be built in the country and that it played a crucial role in the development of the nation.

The text goes on to describe the road's construction, mentioning the difficulties faced by the engineers and the laborers involved. It highlights the importance of the road to the economy, noting that it facilitated the transport of goods and people between the coastal areas and the interior.

The document also contains references to specific towns and landmarks along the road, such as Windsor and Maitland, and notes the importance of these places to the history of Australia.

Overall, the text provides a comprehensive overview of the Great North Road, its historical significance, and its impact on the development of Australia.

[End of text]