From Exmouth, in Western Aust., to the Great Salt Lake, by Philip Saunders and Adam Johnson

Text history of the exploration of the vast continent of Australia, with its attractive subject to the general public that the writer has been personally engaged in this work, and that the results of his researches are now published in this work.

All in this work are accurately represented, and the writer has made every possible effort to make his work as clear and as free from errors as possible.

Our intention was to have reach Pine Creek, Northern Territory, so as to complete our journey to the Gulf of Carpentaria, the results of our efforts are now published in this work.

Talbot's point is about twenty days' distance from the Gulf of Carpentaria, being the principal port of the Northern Territory, and we arrived there with the great wagon of the government, and were forwarded to it by the government.

The Talbot's point is about twenty days' distance from the Gulf of Carpentaria, being the principal port of the Northern Territory, and we arrived there with the government's wagon of the government, and were forwarded to it by the government.

We made our start from the Pine Creek, Northern Territory, on the 20th of October, and proceeded to the Gulf of Carpentaria, the results of our efforts are now published in this work.

The Pine Creek is a fine river, but containing very little water, and we arrived there on the 20th of October, and proceeded to the Gulf of Carpentaria, the results of our efforts are now published in this work.

Our sketches of the Gulf of Carpentaria are now published in this work, and our descriptions of the country are well worth the attention of those who are interested in Australian history and geography.

A Cruise in Moreton Bay: or a Marine Moonlight.

Our sketches as to the human and animal life of the country are now published in this work, and our descriptions of the country are well worth the attention of those who are interested in Australian history and geography.

A Cruise in Moreton Bay: or a Marine Moonlight.

Our sketches as to the human and animal life of the country are now published in this work, and our descriptions of the country are well worth the attention of those who are interested in Australian history and geography.

A Cruise in Moreton Bay: or a Marine Moonlight.

Our sketches as to the human and animal life of the country are now published in this work, and our descriptions of the country are well worth the attention of those who are interested in Australian history and geography.