Barley, flaxseed, peas, and potatoes, which with the wool were substantial producers in each of the last three years, have shared the general declines of prices and of demand for all agricultural products in recent times. Wool, however, has stood out as the chief of the large items of export. The steady increase in the total number of sheep in Australia has been maintained, and with the increased number of sheep, the output of wool increased.

Increased Production

There are indications that the increased production is the result of better methods of management and of the improved condition of the wool industry. The number of sheep in Australia last year was 44,290,290, and the output of wool was 97,465,000 lb.

Many factors may contribute to a feeling of depression. These factors may be divided into two main groups: internal and external. Internal factors include personal traits such as anxiety, overthinking, and a negative outlook on life. External factors include economic conditions, social isolation, and environmental stressors.
