Relief Schemes For Wheatgrowers Are Puzzling Australians

Proposals to Withhold Supplies Discussed

At a meeting on November 28, the Australian Wheatgrowers' Federation, which represents the interests of the wheat growers, discussed the proposals to withhold supplies and the effect it would have on the market. The Federation claimed that the proposals were necessary to protect the growers from further losses and to maintain the price of wheat. However, many other organizations and individuals were critical of the proposals, arguing that they would lead to a decrease in the available supply of wheat and cause hardship to consumers. The debate on this issue continues to be a matter of concern for the Australian government, which is responsible for regulating the wheat industry.
