Ling Hop's Gratitude

By Syd Scott

This must have been the boldest stunt ever attempted by a loving son to deliver a message of urgency to his dad. Ling Hop, the successful Chinese-born actor and director, was resident at the time of this stunt in Shanghai, China. The message was delivered at a high-speed railway station in Shanghai.

The message consisted of six Chinese characters, which read: "Ling Hop is in trouble. He needs help, urgent help." The message was delivered to a high-speed train, which was about to depart for Hong Kong.

The stunt was performed by a man named Li, who had been Ling Hop's personal assistant for many years. Li jumped onto the roof of the train as it was about to depart, and delivered the message to the driver.

The message was immediately forwarded to Ling Hop's office in Hong Kong, where he was in trouble due to financial problems. The message arrived just in time, as Ling Hop was about to lose his business and all of his properties.

The stunt was widely reported in the press, and the Chinese government was impressed by the ingenuity of the stunt. It was considered a brilliant move by Ling Hop, who was known for his creativity and resourcefulness.

The message was delivered in perfect Chinese, and the driver of the train was able to understand it immediately. The driver forwarded the message to the authorities, who were able to prevent Ling Hop from losing his business and properties.

Ling Hop was extremely grateful to his assistant, Li, for his quick thinking and resourcefulness. He immediately offered Li a position as his personal assistant, and the two worked together for many years to come.
