The Powers and China.—Port Arthur, where the British and Russian Warships are lying.

forced the running of their steamers to Port Arthur. The British Government, after a contest lasting several days, were able to purchase the American's Wharf, which was held by a Mr. W. Drif, and move their steamer to the present North Shore. (Mr. Drif is now in Sydney.)

The powers, having settled their differences with Russia, are now arranging matters with each other. The British and Russian Warships at Port Arthur are lying in line, with the British on the British side, and the Russian on the Russian side. The crews of the vessels are in a state of great excitement, as they are anxious to see the battle of the two nations.

The Powers and China.—Port Arthur, where the British and Russian Warships are lying.

forced the running of their steamers to Port Arthur. The British Government, after a contest lasting several days, were able to purchase the American’s Wharf, which was held by a Mr. W. Drif, and move their steamer to the present North Shore. (Mr. Drif is now in Sydney.)

The powers, having settled their differences with Russia, are now arranging matters with each other. The British and Russian Warships at Port Arthur are lying in line, with the British on the British side, and the Russian on the Russian side. The crews of the vessels are in a state of great excitement, as they are anxious to see the battle of the two nations.

The Powers and China.—Port Arthur, where the British and Russian Warships are lying.

forced the running of their steamers to Port Arthur. The British Government, after a contest lasting several days, were able to purchase the American’s Wharf, which was held by a Mr. W. Drif, and move their steamer to the present North Shore. (Mr. Drif is now in Sydney.)

The powers, having settled their differences with Russia, are now arranging matters with each other. The British and Russian Warships at Port Arthur are lying in line, with the British on the British side, and the Russian on the Russian side. The crews of the vessels are in a state of great excitement, as they are anxious to see the battle of the two nations.

The Powers and China.—Port Arthur, where the British and Russian Warships are lying.

forced the running of their steamers to Port Arthur. The British Government, after a contest lasting several days, were able to purchase the American’s Wharf, which was held by a Mr. W. Drif, and move their steamer to the present North Shore. (Mr. Drif is now in Sydney.)

The powers, having settled their differences with Russia, are now arranging matters with each other. The British and Russian Warships at Port Arthur are lying in line, with the British on the British side, and the Russian on the Russian side. The crews of the vessels are in a state of great excitement, as they are anxious to see the battle of the two nations.

The Powers and China.—Port Arthur, where the British and Russian Warships are lying.

forced the running of their steamers to Port Arthur. The British Government, after a contest lasting several days, were able to purchase the American’s Wharf, which was held by a Mr. W. Drif, and move their steamer to the present North Shore. (Mr. Drif is now in Sydney.)

The powers, having settled their differences with Russia, are now arranging matters with each other. The British and Russian Warships at Port Arthur are lying in line, with the British on the British side, and the Russian on the Russian side. The crews of the vessels are in a state of great excitement, as they are anxious to see the battle of the two nations.