H.H. has now seen and done more than any other European. On his departure he takes with him the respect and admiration of all he has met with. On the voyage home, he was the object of the greatest interest, and the ship was always filled with passengers who wished to see him. On his arrival in London, he was received with great enthusiasm, and was decorated with the Order of the Garter.

CAPTAIN BASHAW, "BARBADOS."

The second day after our arrival, H.H. landed in spite of the wind at Yokohama and held a levee at the British Minister's. I was present and witnessed all the preparations. There were no Japanese present, only the English and other European residents and the officers of the various ships in the harbor. The Mutineers and their officers were also present. The levee was conducted with the usual courtesy and respect, and was a great success.

MUTINEERS' CRUISE.

The Cruise of H.M.S. Galatea.

The Cruise of H.M.S. Galatea was one of the most interesting people on Sunday, August 25th. The cruise was in the Meditteranean, and the ship's company were very much interested in the events of the cruise. The object of the cruise was to visit the islands of the Mediterranean, and to visit the places where Captain Bashaw lived. The islands were very beautiful, and in Tahiti there are no active volcanoes, which are of interest to the ethnologists. The islands were visited by the captain, and the crew of the ship, which included some of the most distinguished men in the Mediterranean. They were received very kindly at both places, and the officers and crew were very much pleased with the welcome they received.

CAPTAIN HERBERT, "SHELL."
