The Melbourne Public Library held a special exhibition of 100 portraits of Victorian artists, who were also represented at the Exhibition of the Art Institute. The exhibition was held in the Library and was open to the public between 11 o'clock this morning and 12 o'clock. The portraits were selected from a number of sources, including the National Library of Australia, the Victoria State Library, and private collections. The exhibition was very well attended and attracted a large number of visitors. The Library's director, Mr. J. H. Redmond, said that the exhibition was an attempt to bring together some of the finest portraits of Victorian artists and to give the public an opportunity to see them. He also said that the exhibition was a contribution to the history of the Library and to the study of art in Victoria. The exhibition was well received by the public, who showed a great interest in the portraits and their history. The Library's director said that he hoped that the exhibition would encourage people to visit the Library and to learn more about the history of art in Victoria.
