MADMAN’S GOLD

By R. L. Hadfield

The Lost Treasure of the Colorado Hills

In the summer of 1932, a young man named John Smith discovered a lost treasure in the Colorado Mountains. Smith was a famous adventurer who had made a fortune in the gold rush of 1849. He had retired to live a life of leisure on his ranch in the mountains.

Smith had been searching for the treasure for many years, but had never been able to find it. He had heard stories of a lost gold mine hidden deep in the mountains, and had set out to find it.

After many years of searching, Smith finally discovered the treasure. He had found a huge vein of gold ore, and with the help of his friends, he was able to mine it and take it back to his ranch.

Smith sold the gold for a enormous sum of money, and lived the rest of his life in luxury. He had proved that sometimes, the best places to look for treasure are the places that no one has ever looked before.

Blanks in the Map of Australia

EXPLORATION BY AIR

By Commander Henry T. Benson, D.S.O., R.N.

In 1933, a team of explorers set out to explore the interior of Australia. The team was led by Captain James1 Smith, and included experts in geology, botany, and zoology.

The team flew over the vast desert and mountain ranges, and made many discoveries. They found a new species of bird, and a rare type of cactus that had never been seen before.

The team also discovered a huge deposit of gold, and a vast deposit of coal. They named the deposit "The Great Blanks" after the map it was on, and it became one of the most important discoveries in Australian history.

The team returned to the city of Sydney with their findings, and the news spread quickly. The Great Blanks quickly became a national treasure, and the explorers were hailed as heroes.

Epstein’s Statues in the Strand

THREATENED DESTRUCTION ANGERS SCULPTOR

A sculptor named Epstein had created a series of statues that were to be installed in the Strand. However, the authorities threatened to destroy them, claiming that they were too controversial.

The sculptor was outraged, and decided to take action. He hired a team of experts to create a new set of statues that would replace the old ones. The new statues were even more controversial than the old ones, but they were installed anyway.

The sculpture was a huge success, and the sculptor was hailed as a hero. He had saved his work from destruction, and had proven that art could be controversial and still be appreciated.
