HOW TO DISPOSE OF HITLER & CO

Problem in World Sanitation

By H. G. WILLS, Esq., Editor of "The Argus" in Victoria

Time and again we have heard angry people, and particularly women, advising us to "get rid of Hitler and his lot."

In this article, I will attempt to show that, in the long run, the best way of doing this is not by overthrowing the Nazi régime, but by persuading the people of the world to adopt a more sensible attitude towards the problem of world sanitation.

INADEQUATE REFORM

Sanitation reform will be futility if the public are not made to realize the need for it. In my opinion, the most effective way of achieving this is by launching a massive educational campaign, which would have to be backed up by practical measures, such as the construction of sanitation facilities in all parts of the world.

I propose, therefore, that the following steps be taken:

1. The establishment of a World Health Organization, which would be responsible for the planning and implementation of a world-wide sanitation programme.

2. The provision of adequate sanitation facilities in all parts of the world, including the construction of sewage treatment plants and the provision of clean, safe drinking water.

3. The education of the public in the importance of sanitation, through the medium of mass media campaigns, including television, radio, and the press.

4. The provision of training and education for sanitation workers, including the establishment of training facilities in all parts of the world.

5. The provision of adequate funding for the sanitation programme, both from national and international sources.

In my view, this is the only way in which sanitation reform can be achieved, and the only way in which Hitler and his lot can be removed from the world stage. Otherwise, we shall continue to suffer from the effects of their actions, and the world will remain a place of disease and suffering.
