SOLUTION OF COAL COAL
As the Australian Council of Trade Unions is the spokesman for trade unionists in Australia, it has the deserted right that it is associated primarily in the interests of trade unionists and trade union privileges, rather than as a demonstration of friendship in the coal-mining industry. But that does not mean that it is bound to support the sanctions the use of scab or wrong. Trade unionists as a whole are a hardworking body, and therefore to much an essential of good citizenship as an applicant, eligibility is a mournful one. And as a rule when the workers by their actions are asserting a right to be regarded as right to use a man, free to move to industrial machinery regarding the injury done to their fellow workers and other fellow citizens. It is a condition of the employment of all the laws in all industrial matters.

It follows that the situation and speaking for trade unionism has an obvious upholders of rule of law, even though it offers the more power of resolution unison who have been prepared to and necessarily the same this rule. The ACTU has organized principled that the Government should recognize and support the exercise of its wartime powers to require all miners to be the moral and physical basis of those who work in the mines to be transferred from management responsible to the Government. There would be less incentive for the Government to lead in the public relations, since Government policy would be based on the question of placing the miners.

What "Wartime"

Powers"

The miners' conduct would not improve under nationalization, as they have to be ready to carry all the authority, even though the second alternative, open to the management, the miners' words, "exercise its wartime powers." As one of the spokesmen of the ACTU, Executive, has agreed to this, the minutes of the union members in their union, the miners pursuing the objective of nationalization, that it is difficult to perceive what wartime powers the future is expected to exercise, and the miners are then left to the Government to exercise those powers in the public protector only. It is the consent to lack of discipline for the miners being left to the miners' Federation, where the body has to face this responsibility under the "coal code" for six months, and has failed dismally in controlling any

The Only Way

The only satisfactory way in which the Government can exercise its wartime powers is to put the coal-mining industry under direct and make it impossible for any strike of the Mina

SOLUTION OF COAL
As the Australian Council of Trade Unions is the spokesman for trade unionists in Australia, it has the di-

sion of the relatively few trouble-makers in the coal mines, the anti-social conduct of a number of the Mina-

respective of the interest of the miners, the Minaunionists and trade union privileges, rather than as a dem-friendly right that it is associated primarily in the in-unions. But that does not mean that it is bound to support the sanctions the use of scab or wrong. Trade unionists as a whole are a hardworking body, and there-

therefore to much an essential of good citizenship as an applicant, eligibility is a mournful one. And as a rule when the workers by their actions are asserting a right to be regarded as

right to use a man, free to move to industrial machinery regarding the injury done to their fellow workers and other fellow citizens. It is a condition of the employment of all the laws in all industrial matters.

It follows that the situation and speaking for trade unionism has an obvious upholders of rule of law, even though it offers the more power of resolution unison who have been prepared to and necessarily the same this rule. The ACTU has organized principled that the Government should recognize and support the exercise of its wartime powers to require all miners to be the moral and physical basis of those who work in the mines to be transferred from management responsible to the Government. There would be less incentive for the Government to lead in the public relations, since Government policy would be based on the question of placing the miners.

What "Wartime"

Powers"

The miners' conduct would not improve under nationalization, as they have to be ready to carry all the authority, even though the second alternative, open to the management, the miners' words, "exercise its wartime powers." As one of the spokesmen of the ACTU, Executive, has agreed to this, the minutes of the union members in their union, the miners pursuing the objective of nationalization, that it is difficult to perceive what wartime powers the future is expected to exercise, and the miners are then left to the Government to exercise those powers in the public protector only. It is the consent to lack of discipline for the miners being left to the miners' Federation, where the body has to face this responsibility under the "coal code" for six months, and has failed dismally in controlling any

The Only Way

The only satisfactory way in which the Government can exercise its wartime powers is to put the coal-mining industry under direct and make it impossible for any strike of the Mina

SOLUTION OF COAL
As the Australian Council of Trade Unions is the spokesman for trade unionists in Australia, it has the di-

sion of the relatively few trouble-makers in the coal mines, the anti-social conduct of a number of the Mina-

respective of the interest of the miners, the Mina-

unionists and trade union privileges, rather than as a dem-

friendly right that it is associated primarily in the in-

unions. But that does not mean that it is bound to support the sanctions the use of scab or wrong. Trade unionists as a whole are a hardworking body, and there-

therefore to much an essential of good citizenship as an applicant, eligibility is a mournful one. And as a rule when the workers by their actions are asserting a right to be regarded as

right to use a man, free to move to industrial machinery regarding the injury done to their fellow workers and other fellow citizens. It is a condition of the employment of all the laws in all industrial matters.

It follows that the situation and speaking for trade unionism has an obvious upholders of rule of law, even though it offers the more power of resolution unison who have been prepared to and necessarily the same this rule. The ACTU has organized principled that the Government should recognize and support the exercise of its wartime powers to require all miners to be the moral and physical basis of those who work in the mines to be transferred from management responsible to the Government. There would be less incentive for the Government to lead in the public relations, since Government policy would be based on the question of placing the miners.

What "Wartime"

Powers"

The miners' conduct would not improve under nationalization, as they have to be ready to carry all the authority, even though the second alternative, open to the management, the miners' words, "exercise its wartime powers." As one of the spokesmen of the ACTU, Executive, has agreed to this, the minutes of the union members in their union, the miners pursuing the objective of nationalization, that it is difficult to perceive what wartime powers the future is expected to exercise, and the miners are then left to the Government to exercise those powers in the public protector only. It is the consent to lack of discipline for the miners being left to the miners' Federation, where the body has to face this responsibility under the "coal code" for six months, and has failed dismally in controlling any

The Only Way

The only satisfactory way in which the Government can exercise its wartime powers is to put the coal-mining industry under direct and make it impossible for any strike of the Mina