The weather has still continued mostly unseasonable, and there is no likelihood the change will be permanent. The heat prevails, the thermometer reaching 100 F., which is particularly unpleasant, as the air is so much dampened. The people are finding it necessary to wear light clothing, and are much fatigued by the excessive heat. The gardens and ornamental plants are suffering, and there is a scarcity of vegetables. The water supply is insufficient, and the streets are becoming very dirty.

The Railway Department have returned to the old system of public notices, and the Board of Tramways has been abolished. The new system is to be operative immediately, and the public is asked to comply with the regulations.

The Board of Works have extended the tramway system to the north of the city, and are now preparing plans for the extension to the south. The works are to be completed within the next six months.

The Board of Works have also decided to extend the sewerage system to the north of the city, and to construct a new water reservoir. The work is to be commenced immediately.
